

A charity walk

(Written by Fu Chung Victor, 6A)

Charity Walk is a charity that helps children in China. There was a charity event at Steve's school last week, which was raising money for poor children in China. Steve wanted to join the Charity Walk because he could help the charity to buy food and books for the children in China.

There were so many classmates to join the charity walk. They should have so much energy because it was a long walk which was over 9 km long. Fortunately, Benson, who was Steve's best friend, took part in the charity walk with him. They walked along the promenade. They felt thrilled and delighted.

The weather was boiling and scorching. Steve walked with his classmates for around four hours, and they took a rest. At that moment, Steve had no more water to drink. After all, he felt tired and exhausted.

Because Steve had no water, he fainted from a heat stroke. The teacher called an ambulance and sent him to the hospital immediately. Unluckily, he died after a few days because he had a heat stroke for a few hours.

A charity walk

(Written by Au Tsz Sum Karson, 6B)

One day at school, Steve's teacher said to the class, 'There is a charity walk event which will be held next Sunday. It is a charity walk that helps children in China. Does anyone want to join this event?' Steve raised his hand and said, 'I'd like to join it!' Steve thought it was meaningful, and he was interested in joining this event.

On Sunday, the charity walk was held at the park. Many classmates gathered in the park and prepared to walk. It was a long walk which was over 8 kilometers long. They felt very excited and thrilled.

It was such a hot day. Everyone felt very tired after walking for a while. Steve also felt exhausted and thirsty. He decided to open his backpack and took out his water bottle. Unfortunately, he found his water bottle was empty. He felt disappointed and wanted to cry at the same time.

Luckily, one of the classmates comforted Steve, 'I've brought one more bottle of water, and you may drink it.' Steve felt grateful and thanked his classmates for their generosity. Finally, all the classmates finished the charity walk. They raised so much money. It was such a meaningful day.

A charity walk

(Written by Wong Man Chiu Mandy, 6C)

Last Friday, at ten o'clock in the morning, it was the English lesson. Steve's English teacher, Miss Chan, came into the classroom with some textbooks. She wrote on the blackboard, "Charity walk helps children in China." Miss Chan said, "Tomorrow is Saturday. Our school will hold a charity walk on a promenade, and I hope everyone can actively participate in helping those homeless children in China. A charity walk is an event that aims at raising funds for the children in China." Steve wanted to join it to contribute to society and help those children.

The next day, Steve's friends, Anna and Fred, joined the charity walk with Steve. They came to the place where the event was held. There were so many people in the country park.

It was extremely hot on that day. Everyone felt so tired.

Steve's water was running out. He's thirsty. He felt exhausted and dizzy!

In the end, he fainted due to the lack of water. Anna and Fred took Steve to a cool place to rest. Fred gave Steve his bottle of water. He was so grateful to him. After a while, they finally reached the finish line successfully, and he raised so much money. What an unforgettable day!

A charity walk

(Written by Law Man Him William, 6D)

One day, Steve's teacher asked, 'Who wants to join a charity walk that helps children in China?' Steve felt very excited and raised his hand. The charity walk was held in the park near his school in Mid-October. He wanted to join it because he thought it could help poor children.

On the day of the charity walk, the weather was sunny and hot. Steve and his classmates took part in the event. They were excited because it was the first time they had walked for three hours.

During the walk, they saw a lot of birds and butterflies. They also heard a lot of natural sounds in the park. It looked like the birds and the butterflies were welcoming Steve and his classmates. They were grateful. As the weather was sweltering, Steve felt dizzy and uncomfortable. However, he drank all the water.

Luckily, a volunteer gave Steve some water. He thanked her and promised he would bring more water next time. Then he continued to walk happily. What a momentous day!

A charity walk

(Written by Leung Yui To Joseph, 6E)

Last week, Miss Chan, Steve's class teacher, announced a charity walk the coming Saturday. Steve was as happy as a fish in water. He loved doing charity walks so much. He wanted to join the charity walk because he could help children in China.

On the day of the charity walk, so many classmates took part in the event with Steve. Steve and his classmates were very thrilled. The charity walk was about to start on the promenade. Steve was ready when the announcer yelled, 'Three, two, one!' Steve and his classmates began walking. It was boiling on that day. Steve almost melted in the walk.

He felt super thirsty. When Steve took his water bottle out, he realized there was no more water in his water bottle. He felt terrified that he might have a heat stroke. Steve started feeling very dizzy. He was as thirsty as he was in a desert.

Luckily, there was a vending machine nearby selling bottled water. Steve rushed to the vending machine immediately. He bought a bottle of water and drank it up all in a second. He was not thirsty anymore.

Steve learnt that when he has outdoor activities like jogging and running, he must bring enough water. Then, he will not be thirsty while he is doing outdoor activities.

